Forecast For Northwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 12 Mar 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Remaining wet and windy, possible hail and thunder. Feeling cold.

Today:
Another wet and windy day, with frequent showers throughout. These are likely to be heavier during the morning, easing slightly through the afternoon, yet carry risk of hail. Snow possible over hills. The odd sunny spell, but feeling cold. Maximum temperature 8 deg C (46 deg F).

Tonight:
A brief dry spell for many this evening, before showers approach again, generally heavy through the night, with possible hail, and snow over hills. Winds strengthening, with further coastal gales. Minimum temperature 2 deg C (36 deg F).

Saturday:
Showers ease from overnight, though heavier bursts are likely through the afternoon, with snow over hills. Some sunny spells, with strong winds throughout, possible gales. Feeling cold. Maximum temperature 7 deg C (45 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Blustery showers and sunny spells Sunday, with snow across higher ground, and winds easing. Cloudy with some rain later on Monday. Rain and drizzle Tuesday morning, but some sunshine later.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.